Is It Time for Feedback? Checklist

Overview

This lesson is a set up to support students in seeking feedback from themselves, peers, or the teacher. There are prompts to the student that will help structure thinking about what kind of feedback they need and who could be a support in providing it. The goal is to equip students with self-talk and strategies that drive their own ability to provide themselves with feedback or effectively seek it from a peer before immediately going to the teacher, which is what so many students do. In order for these actions to become ingrained in students, the feedback checklists will need to be a routine component of learning.

Teacher Preparation

Students may need support understanding how to use the checklists in the lesson. Examples connected to their current class may support their understanding. It will also be important that the lessons selected for using these checklists lend themselves to students seeking feedback on their own, from a peer or from the teacher.

Feedback is like advice you receive to let you know how you are doing as a learner. The goal of feedback is to help you understand what you need to do in order to get to where you need to be in your learning.

Sometimes you can give yourself the feedback that you need, and other times you may require the help of a peer or the teacher.

Assessment-capable visible learners have different ways to get feedback and know what to do with it.

Here are checklists you can use to help you determine when you need feedback. You will explore ways that you can give yourself feedback or get feedback from a peer or the teacher.
